

Dorsey Hall is director of the Division of Nondepository Institutions for the Kentucky Department of Financial Institutions (DFI), effective April 16, 2018. As division director, Hall is responsible for the regulation of nondepository institutions operating in Kentucky, including mortgage loan companies and brokers, mortgage loan originators, consumer loan companies, check cashers, and money transmitters. Through its four branches, the division examines companies, licenses and registers entities and individuals, and investigates complaints and suspicious activity. The division also provides educational materials and outreach to protect consumers from financial fraud.

Hall has more than 30 years of banking experience in Kentucky, specializing in commercial banking and lending for community and national banks across the state. Hall's past career highlights include 26 years as the president and chief executive officer of two large community banks headquartered in Kentucky and 12 years as an operations officer and commercial lender at a national bank in Lexington. During his banking career, he directly participated in opening 10 new bank charters, negotiated and managed the merger/acquisition of seven financial institutions, and has held a variety of bank job titles, including chief credit officer, chief operating officer, president, CEO, and board chairman. He has been President/CEO of banks ranging in size from $100 million to $1.1 billion dollars in asset size.

He has most recently served on the Kentucky Economic Development Finance Authority (KEDFA), and previously on other boards, including the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland Community Advisors Board, the Kentucky Real Estate Appraisers Board, and the Kentucky Department of Financial Institutions Board. He also previously served the Kentucky Bankers Association, YMCA Metro Board of Lexington, and eight Chambers of Commerce in Kentucky.

A Winchester, Ky., native, Hall is married with one daughter. He has lived in at least eight different counties and worked in as many as 21 during his banking career. He is a graduate of George Rogers Clark High School, the University of Kentucky, Louisiana State University Graduate School of Banking, and Ball State University-Omega Commercial Lending School. In addition, he holds a number of other diplomas and certificates from other banking/lending schools and seminars. He and his family currently live in Lexington and attend El Bethel United Methodist Church.